AISD contends the trial should be narrowed to the three remaining factual incidents left undismissed by this Court, whereas Plaintiff believes she should be able to produce evidence of other behavior or conduct outside of the three remaining incidents. As the parties disagree over the scope of the trial, it is impossible for AISD to identify all exhibits that may be necessary, as it depends on the evidence and testimony the Court allows Plaintiff to present. As such, AISD reserves the right to supplement this list and introduce documents into evidence for rebuttal or for impeachment purposes, the necessity of which cannot reasonably be anticipated before a hearing on the parties’ pretrial motions is held or at the trial of this matter. AISD further reserves the right to use exhibits designated or proffered at trial by Plaintiff; however, AISD reserves the right to challenge the admissibility of Plaintiff’s proffered exhibits.
